NEW YORK CITY, NY – Scott Lobaido, the Thin Blue Line artist who’s currently fighting New York City’s “Cease and Desist” letter, has fully organized his “Don’t Give Up the Ship” Rally at the Manhattan City Hall this Saturday, August 22nd.

Last month, popular patriotic artist Scott Lobaido painted a beautiful Thin Blue Line in front on a Staten Island Precinct as a show of support for the NYPD and law enforcement everywhere. Given his disdain for the irresponsible mayor of NYC, Bill de Blasio, Scott wants to hold the strongest rally in the history of New York City.

As a testament to Scott’s commitment and support of the law enforcement community, he recreated the letter into an art piece and sold it at auction to raise over $13,000- all of which was donated to the NYC Cops & Kids Boxing Club.

Scott recently told LET:

“That’s a great cause... showing the cops and the community working together with these kids in bad neighborhoods.”

Scott’s rally is not a partisan rally. He wants to bring New Yorkers together regardless of background to save the city from its poorly performing government.

Scott says in his website:

“This is simply THE RALLY to represent New Yorkers who are getting slaughtered by this city’s horrible administration.”

Scott has long been in a feud with the Mayor and has seen the “ineffective governing” writing on the wall. He wants his voice heard but more importantly, he wants the voices of all frustrated New Yorkers to be heard this Saturday.

Scott said:

“I predicted this coming many years ago and this is our darkest hour... and it’s always the darkest before dawn. It’s going to hit its peak, and the people are going to wake up.”

If you scroll through any social media outlet, you will see posts about the decline and dismantling of once great cities such as Chicago, Seattle, Portland and, of course, New York City. But Scott is doing everything he can to prevent the total annihilation of the city- which is the inspiration for the title of his rally, “Don’t Give Up the Ship.”

Scott and his team expect this rally to be the catalyst for the desperate change New York City needs and deserves. He hopes everyone willing and able can make it and show support and solidarity.

Scott said:

“Take the day off, get your kids into a day care center... take the f day off and be there!”

Passionate words from a passionate man fighting tooth and nail to bring back the greatness that was once New York City.

And he is not alone. Scott Lobaido's team has guests scheduled to speak at the rally, including actor/comedian Joe Piscopo, founder of Guardian Angels Curtis Sliwa, and several others.

What role will you play to support his cause? If you're close enough, get there. You can register on his website at www.ScottLobaido.com

If you want to be a rock star, register to volunteer to help.

If you're not local, you can still show support by donating to his team's GoFundMe page available on his website set up to help cover the costs of the stage, transportation for registrants, Jumbotrons, porta-potties and so on. We'll see you there!
